Strategies in %

1) The calculation of the risk indicator is based on the CESR/10-673 Directive. The risk indicator is based on historic and partly simulated data; it cannot be used to predict future developments. The classification of the Fund may change in future and does not represent a guarantee. A classification into category 1 is not a risk-free investment either.

2) Historical performance indications and financial market scenarios are not reliable indicators of current or future performance. The performance data does not take into account the commissions and costs incurred on the issue and redemption of fund units.

Portfolio Commentary

Month in review

The portfolio posted negative performance in February. Equity long-short, macro and CTA strategies all detracted, while event-driven was broadly flat for the month.

Equity Long-Short strategies were the largest detractors in February. The China growth-oriented long-short manager was down in February, as the sentiment-driven correction impacted the manager's long positions. However, it was somewhat mitigated as the manager has been systematically reducing the fund's exposure throughout the past several months by more than 60%. The manager has been discussing the Russia-Ukraine situation during weekly meetings as it unfolded, and the team did not see much correlation between this situation and China, as well as the companies in which they invested. The manager is not planning to make any portfolio changes related to that as the portfolio is 80% focused on China-A. The manager has also started to see optimistic signs of a rebound across the US and China, and strong flows supporting companies with solid fundamentals. As such, the team have been diligently optimizing the book to ensure they are poised to maximize their ability to capture the upcoming rebound. During February, losses were led by long positions in Chinese companies including, an online shopping platform, FinTech platform and beverage manufacturer. Also, the quant equity manager was negative in February, as both the EMN and Macro components detracted. Within the EMN strategy, Fundamental, Technical and Event models were down, while Alpha Capture models had a small positive contribution. In the Macro strategy, both Technical and Fundamental models across the long- and short-term horizon detracted. Equities, Fixed Income and Credit exposures were negative with small positive returns from currency exposures. The Macro strategies were the second biggest detractor during the month. The diversified UCITS macro manager was down in February, with EM debt being the most significant detractor mainly as a result of exposure to Russian rates. Duration and yield-curve positioning was also a detractor on a net basis, mainly as a result of overall long US duration exposure. IG and HY credit exposures were negative for performance, mainly due to energy and financials. Overall FX positioning was negative on a net basis. EM FX detracted mainly due to long RUB exposure. DM FX was positive, with long AUD exposure as the main contributor. Moreover, following the imposition of SWIFT sanctions, the manager began reducing portfolio risk from both investment-grade and high-yield exposure as well as in EM positions to bring down overall volatility. Finally, the CTA strategy also detracted, with the short-term trend-follower performing worst. In terms of sectors, equity indices and bonds detracted most, followed by interest rates, while energy, commodities and currencies were all in the black. Geographically, North America detracted the most for equities. In bonds, all regions were negative, except for NA. Europe and NA also detracted for rates, while other regions were broadly flat. Finally, all regions were flat for FX.
