MANAGEMENT COMMENT as of 31/03/2015

Commodities as a whole continued to fall significantly in Q1. The energy sector was the main driver: oil tumbled in an oversupplied market, while natural gas fell due to mild temperatures in the US. Industrials metals also lost ground, but still outperformed the market, as did precious metals, which recorded positive returns. Agricultural commodities had negative returns amid higher inventories. We raised the exposure to curve-enhanced strategies amid larger inventories for commodities such as oil, natural gas and grains. Over the quarter, we moved to an underweight in energy, including natural gas. Base and precious metals exposures both benefited from this move. We remain underweight grains (wheat and corn) and overweight livestock (live cattle). The portfolio outperformed its benchmark in Q1. Performance benefited from deferred positions in energy and lean hogs as well as the overweight in precious metals. For the coming quarter, the reaction of oil producers to the current market context (will they or won't they adjust output?) and the US Federal Reserve's decision on the timing of rate hikes should be the main triggers of commodity market moves.
