The fund's aims

The fund aims to achieve a positive return over the longer term, notwithstanding changing market conditions, investing principally in the shares of companies listed, quoted or traded in Europe, including the UK.

Fund update

August was a volatile month on stock exchanges across Europe. In euro terms, markets ended the month 1.4% lower. The big news was sterling's rally against the euro from the middle of the month as the market attempted to evaluate Prime Minister Johnson's approach to Brexit.

For its part, a sharp sell-off in Borr Drilling meant the fund ended the month lower. As crude prices fell, oil companies had a mixed month. While some of our long positions (such as Tullow) gained, the drilling segment of the market came under pressure as investors worried about the hoped-for upturn in the capex cycle – and the leverage – in these companies. Sentiment towards this part of the market is terrible. Even results showing new contract wins for Borr did little to help. On an entirely plausible scenario, its shares now trade on a multiple of just 3x 2020 cashflows. So we are holding on.

More positively, our short book made a useful contribution: 13 of the fund's top 20 winners in August were short positions. Some of the companies in question suffered from profits warnings; others fell as the outlook deteriorated. In the long book, our positions in the communications sector did best, particularly Mediaset España and ITV.

In July, approximately $12 trillion of government debt worldwide had a negative yield. That number has now shot higher – to $17 trillion. A growing number of investors appear willing to lose money to hold 'safe' assets. It is puzzling to wonder what these investors are so scared of. While we have had many recessions in the market's history, none have required investors to pay governments for the privilege of lending to them. So it can't be that. Equally, we have had messy political situations in the past – so it can't be that either. Similarly, trade wars have come and gone without yields turning negative.

Instead, it simply seems to be a matter of central bankers being so deeply committed to quantitative easing that they are doubling-down on that strategy despite there being so little evidence of its success. Will investors follow their lead and suspend belief while paying ever-higher multiples for growth stocks? Or will the stalling of earnings growth eventually provoke a more circumspect approach to valuation? Our views – and our portfolio – tend towards the latter...
