Historical data, such as is used to calculate the risk/return ratio, may not be a reliable indication of the future risk profile of the Fund. There is no guarantee that the management objectives in terms of risk and return will actually be met.

Portfolio manager comment

2016 was an eventful year and ended finally on a positive note despite having started in the most inauspicious of circumstances. The combined threats of a decline in the Chinese economy, slowing growth in the US and the effects of falling oil prices on high yield credit had sent the European equity indices tumbling by 20% in mid-February. Economic data then came as reassurance for investors. In fact, US growth remains robust, China's black box economy continues to generate growth in the region of 6% and the oil price rally has restored confidence on the credit markets. The three votes scheduled from summer onwards, which in theory each had an unfavourable outcome for the financial markets (Brexit, Donald Trump's election and the Italian prime minister's resignation), were not enough to hinder the recovery. The election of Donald Trump to the White House, with his raft of reforms (fiscal stimulus, tax cuts, protectionism and lower regulatory burden), symbolises the dawn of a new era: higher inflation, interest rate hikes and a rising dollar. In the second half of the year,

US 10-year Treasury bill yields increased from 1.4% to 2.4%, the dollar rose against all global currencies and the prices of metal and oil soared.

Although ultimately the European equity indices only posted a modest annual gain (+0.65% for the DJ Stoxx 50 NR, +3.72% for the Euro Stoxx 50 NR and +0.82% for the MSCI Europe Smid Cap NR), the difference in sector performances was remarkable and clearly confirms that guiding themes are undergoing rotation. At the top of the leader board were raw materials and energy, surging 62% and 23% respectively, and construction and industrials posted gains of 9%. Conversely, telecoms, health care and real estate suffered losses of 16%, 10% and 8%.

Confidence abounds as we enter 2017. Growth is prevalent in the United States, Europe and China. Oil and commodity producing nations are regaining their equilibrium and even Brazil appears to have seen the worst of its recession. While they are bound to rise, interest rates remain low and are a continuing boost to the economy and equity valuations. The dollar's appreciation is another positive factor for European companies.

Unaffected by these certainly dramatic, yet still cyclical, changes, we remain committed to our investment philosophy and continue to seek out successful companies that generate value regardless of the economic conditions, with attractive valuations.
