Review

Global equity markets had a positive first quarter in 2015, with the MSCI World Index rising 5.8% in local currency terms.

The strategy underperformed the benchmark. Consumer discretionary stocks detracted significantly across several areas, particularly "unloved emerging markets", as Sands China and Las Vegas Sands underperformed. Twenty-First Century Fox, the global broadcasting, film and cable network company, also detracted after reporting a solid quarter, with earnings that were in line with analysts' expectations. The share price fell, however, as a result of a reduction in guidance for 2015 and 2016, which was more significant than had been expected.

Conversely, the healthcare and industrials sectors were notably strong and being underweight stocks that behave like "bond proxies" such as utilities contributed positively to performance. Within healthcare, Boston Scientific was a strong key contributor. Teva, Sanofi and Pfizer also performed well. Boston Scientific, the US maker of medical devices, settled a long-running legal dispute with Johnson & Johnson, which had been a significant legal overhang for a number of years for the stock. We believe the company is still operating below potential and its pipeline of new products has the potential to deliver double-digit earnings over the long term.

Outlook

As monetary policy continues to diverge, we can expect uneven, but accelerating, global growth, led by the US, which appears to be further along in the economic cycle.

Investor suitability

Investor profile

This Sub-Fund may be suitable for investors looking for long term capital growth through exposure to an aggressively managed portfolio of companies, globally. Investors should have at least a three to five year investment horizon.

Key risks

The value of your investment may fall as well as rise and you may get back less than you originally invested.

Because the Sub-Fund is aggressively managed, volatility may be high,

The value of equity securities may go down as well as up in response to the performance of individual companies and general market conditions.

Emerging markets may be subject to increased political, regulatory and economic instability, less developed custody and settlement practices, poor transparency and greater financial risks. Emerging market currencies may be subject to volatile price movements. Emerging market securities may also be subject to higher volatility and lower liquidity than non emerging market securities.

The Sub-Fund may be concentrated in industry sectors and/or countries and as a result, may be more volatile than more broadly diversified funds.

The Sub-Fund may invest in securities of smaller companies which may be less liquid, more volatile and tend to carry greater financial risk than securities of larger companies.

Movements in currency exchange rates can adversely affect the return of your investment. The currency hedging that may be used to minimise the effect of currency fluctuations may not always be successful.
