

BNP Paribas Flexi I US Mortgage Fund

Monthly Report January 2019 FOR PROFESSIONAL INVESTORS

Investment Objective

The BNP Paribas Flexi I US Mortgage Fund ("Fund") seeks to achieve as high a level of total return as is consistent with the stability of capital. The Fund invests primarily in mortgage, asset-backed and other mortgage-related securities and maintains an average US dollar-weighted duration within one year (plus or minus) of the average US dollar-weighted duration of the Bloomberg Barclays US MBS Index.

Investment Strategy

The Fund primarily invests in high quality (rating of AA by S&P, Aa by Moody's or a comparable rating or higher from a nationally recognized statistical rating organization) mortgage and asset-backed securities using hedging techniques to manage the various risks inherent in mortgage-backed securities. The Fund seeks to outperform the Bloomberg Barclays US MBS Index. The Index tracks the mortgage-backed pass-through securities of Ginnie Mae (GNMA), Fannie Mae (FNMA) and Freddie Mac (FHLMC). Securities for the Fund are carefully selected from the broad universe of mortgage-backed securities based on the unique risk/reward characteristics of each holding while taking into account the marginal impact each position has on the overall interest rate risk, prepayment risk, basis risk, convexity risk and volatility risk of the Fund relative to its benchmark.

Portfolio Review

The Privilege share class of the BNP Paribas Flexi I US Mortgage Fund returned +0.89% in January, outperforming the Bloomberg Barclays US MBS Index by 10 bps. Overweight positioning in 30-year versus 15-year MBS contributed to performance. The portfolio had a long bias to the MBS sector entering the month. We took profits on that trade and it added 1bp. Spreads on hybrid arms were wider in January leading that sector to underperform. Positions in prepayment sensitive CMOs earned good carry, prices performed in line with hedges, and the position added to performance. Our allocation to CMBS underperformed due to wider spreads on limited activity. The portfolio added tactically to Inverse IO positions in January.

Market Review

A number of dovish speeches from FOMC officials helped boost investor appetites for risk assets in January. The FOMC meeting on January 29th confirmed the Fed's dovish turn and demonstrated that in fact that the Fed has adopted the bond market view that economic growth was moderating and further rate hikes were not necessary at this time. Patient was the key word from the Fed's statement as they removed any bias to raise rates in the near term. Additionally, the balance sheet run-off is no longer on auto-pilot and will be adjusted if warranted by economic conditions. US treasury yields fell during the month with the 10-year yield closing at 2.63%. The yield curve flattened with 2-year/10-year spread moving in to 17 bps. Risk asset performance was strongly positive reversing the underperformance seen in December. After falling 9% last month, the S&P 500 was up 8% in January. Excess returns for fixed income asset classes were strongly positive for US high yield +4.08%, US investment grade credit +1.83% and EM USD +2.68%. Structured products also fared well with total returns for MBS +.79% for the month and excess returns for MBS +.32% and for CMBS +.48%.

The January prepayment report showed a small decline in aggregate FNMA 30 year speeds. Seasonal factors kept speeds low once again. The sharp drop in 10-year yields in December did not impact this report. The Mortgage Bankers Association Refinancing Index bounced off its recent low though it remains near the lowest levels we have seen since 2000. Barring a sustained move lower in US rates near term prepayment speeds should continue to be well behaved. Longer term we will need to see if the recent rally has further legs which could spark some refinancing activity.

Outlook

The Fed's dovish turn has been well received by the financial markets. The Fed has at least for now adopted the bond market's view that both US and global growth have been moderating, US inflation is and will remain slightly below target and there is therefore no need for additional rate hikes. With the Fed on hold and patient we may very well have seen the peak in US 10-year yields last October at 3.25%. The Fed's balance sheet policy is no longer on "auto-pilot" with an indication that adjustments to the pace of run-off could be made if downside risks play out. Risk asset performance recovered most if not all of the late 2018 underperformance. Spreads on investment grade corporates are back to levels we last saw in mid- November.

After a very tough 4th quarter which saw a big rates rally and more curve flattening, mortgage coupon swaps recovered somewhat in January. Markets see the Fed at the end or very near to the end of the tightening cycle which was supportive of higher coupon MBS. Specified pool premiums also moved higher in January. There is widespread concern across the investor community over a significant increase in the weighted average coupons (WAC) of mortgage pools originated in 2018. The adverse WAC characteristic of the 2018 generic production pools has driven up the pay up premiums investors for non-generic specified pools including lower loan balance, lower WAC, and seasoned pools.

Given the strong performance in the MBS sector we reduced our tactical overweight to FNMA 4.0% versus UST. We are now neutral and would use any underperformance as an opportunity to move back to an overweight. The February payroll report was solid with a gain of 304k jobs, an increase to 63.2% in the labor participation rate and a year on year gain in average hourly earnings of 3.2%. So the US economic expansion continues. We do however think that volatility in financial markets will remain for the time being. Worldwide economic data indicates some slowing. Corporate leverage remains high and despite decent 4th quarter earnings many companies are lowering guidance for future revenue and earnings. January though was "risk on" and investment grade and high yield credit spreads moved sharply tighter. MBS spreads also tightened but lagged the move in credit. MBS valuations remain near the wider end of the recent range with FNMA 4.0% at +106. MBS prepayments remain very well behaved and carry in the sector has improved. Primary origination rates have moved lower but are not low enough to spark a refinancing response. We favor higher coupons over lower coupons and see opportunities in prepayment sensitive sectors.
