The fund's aims

The fund aims to achieve a positive return over the longer term, notwithstanding changing market conditions, investing principally in the shares of companies listed, quoted or traded in Europe, including the UK.

Fund update

Your fund's net asset value (NAV) rose during May even as European equity markets struggled to make headway. Indeed, in the latter half of the month, most indices suffered precipitous falls due to developments in Italian – and global – politics. At times it seemed to be a race to see which could collapse fastest: investors' confidence or German bund yields. We haven't seen this kind of rush for safety for some time. It demonstrates quite clearly that nobody should become complacent during periods of tightening by central banks. Economic and inflation data releases confirmed our belief that monetary policy will continue to tighten, still led by the US Federal Reserve.

Energy was the most favourable exposure for the fund during the month. Oil prices rose again, reaching $76 per barrel – a level few thought possible a matter of months ago. Our larger and less volatile long positions in Royal Dutch and Statoil (which has now been renamed Equinor; Norway seems to prefer to pretend it isn't an oil company) did well, as did exploration company Tullow Oil. All three have performed their way to being large holdings. We took some profits here to recycle into other opportunities in the sector at a later date. Premier Oil was the largest percentage gainer for the fund and contributed nicely, despite being a smaller position (due to liquidity reasons). All of our oil services companies rose and energy remains the fund's biggest net long exposure.

Historically, whenever investors have panicked about European equities they have focused their selling attention on banks. This time was no different and our long positions in the sector suffered. At the same time, we were able to book significant profits in Italian financial shorts alongside our short in an asset manager. The net result was a drag from the financial sector – but nothing too damaging. In fact, in early June we were able to add to holdings in the sector at what we believed to be temporarily distressed prices.

Elsewhere in the short book, our limited bets against technology companies cost us an element of performance. But this was offset by profits in a number of consumer and industrial companies. We have initiated new shorts in the industrials area, where we see signs of inventory correction and weaker production statistics which could have an impact on demand.
