OYSTER JAPAN OPPORTUNITIES C JPY PR

Investment objective

The fund's objective is to provide investors with capital growth by investing across a diversified set of carefully selected Japanese equities. A style-agnostic and conviction-based portfolio, the fund will typically invests in 40 to 60 companies that can be split in two categories, anchor stocks that include mid and large caps that are typically more immune to economic cycles - and macro sensitive mega and large caps. Investment decisions rely on thorough fundamental analysis and positions are selected according to the upside potential of each company relative to its intrinsic value. The portfolio has exhibited less volatility to the market over time.

Manager Comment*HIGHLIGHTS

- The Topix rose to its highest level in a decade in September
- Japanese firms are benefiting from good business conditions and strong earnings
- There was limited activity within the fund in September

MARKET REVIEW

The Topix Net Total Return gained +4.2% in September, hitting its highest level in a decade in the process. Financials rose by +7%, whereas utilities fell by -4%. Value outperformed Growth by 150bps, while the yen lost -2% against the US dollar, moving to JPY 112.5 per dollar. Earnings momentum remained solid over the month. The Topix is trading at 14x its 12-month forward P/E, lower than the 18x of the S&P 500 and the 15x of the Stoxx 600. Economic data – including consumer sentiment – continue to gradually improve.

FUND REVIEW

The fund underperformed the Topix NTR in September due to its underweight in cyclicals. Sector allocation boosted its relative return slightly thanks to its overweight in Financials. The main contributors at the stock level were Persol Holdings (formerly Temp Holdings), which rose by +18% over the month, and Dip, a part-time-job portal operator, which was up 11% on an upwards earnings? revision. The main detractors were Nippon TV, a broadcasting company, and Japan Post Bank. Activity within the fund was muted over the month. The managers halved their position in SMC, a factory automation device maker, due to limited upside. They exited Recruit, an HR services and advertising company, after its stock price jumped on its addition to the Nikkei 225. This sharp increase resulted in a stretched valuation. Otherwise, sector weights remained unchanged. The managers met over 35 companies in September during their regular trip to Japan. Most companies retain a positive short-term outlook, and we got the impression that companies now seem to care more about their longer-term growth. Having cleaned their balance sheets and met the earning targets they have set in the last two years, they are now focusing more on business with higher visibility and lower volatility.

OUTLOOK

The managers' conviction in railways remains intact due to solid business activity and strong tourist numbers. They also continue to like construction for its good business visibility. Both these areas are within the industrials sector. The fund has no exposure to commodities due to their valuations and unpredictable prices or to technology hardware as longer-term business conditions remain uncertain.
