FUND COMMENTARY

European equity markets started 2024 on a strong note, much like they ended 2023. Inflationary pressures are easing, with the European Central Bank now expecting to reach its 2% inflation target in 2025. Against this backdrop, central banks have indicated a readiness to lower interest rates, albeit at a slower pace than originally anticipated.

The full-year results published during the quarter confirmed 2023 was a strong year for portfolio holdings. Organic sales growth of the companies in the portfolio rose to low double digits in 2023, maintaining the high 2022 growth pace.

The sales growth dynamic of the portfolio companies has accelerated from its long-term average. This partly has to do with price increases supporting nominal growth during a period of high inflation. But not only.

Fundamentals have also been strong during a period of significant disruption (inflation, supply chain constraints and tightening credit, to name a few). In this environment the portfolio's quality characteristics have come to the fore and have helped drive an acceleration of growth.

ASML was one of the top contributors during the quarter, benefitting from the rise of Nvidia and the broader strong backdrop for AI chipsets. This has driven a sharp increase in its backlog, helping underpin the company's strong medium- and long-term visibility.

Novo Nordisk also performed strongly. The firm acquired fill-finish sites from Catalent to help satisfy the rapidly growing demand for its obesity franchise while continuing to invest in its pipeline of new products. The company's Capital Markets Day underscored the long-term opportunity in obesity, but also Novo's commitment to investing elsewhere to secure long-term growth. The acquisition of German biotech Cardior Pharmaceuticals in heart disease is a case in point.

Lonza's shares performed strongly. The group announced the acquisition of Roche's Genentech manufacturing facility for large-scale biologics manufacturing in Vacaville, triggering an upgrade to the company's mid-term targets. This comes at a time when potential implications of the US Biosecure Act threaten competitor WuXi in the US market.

Adyen was another top contributor. H2 results confirmed a significant reacceleration of growth after the H1'23 slowdown. The combination of accelerating top-line growth and slower hiring yielded strong operating leverage, while the company reiterated its medium-term guidance out to 2026.

Ferrari also continues to surprise positively. The brand is in rude health, as demonstrated by its ability to continue premiumising, while limiting volumes.

Among the detractors, Jeronimo Martins reported FY 2023 results with a cautious tone for 2024, highlighting potentially higher margin pressure in its Polish business due to the combination of food deflation and a difficult consumer environment at a time when labour costs and rents are still rising.

Accenture published Q2 results as well as a FY 2024 outlook which were both below expectations due to a less dynamic spending behaviour by its clients. The stock reacted negatively on the day as AI had spurred significant investor interest and multiple expansion. We continue to think that Accenture has a significant revenue opportunity from AI, as its clients position themselves to embrace the technology.

Campari fell following the acquisition of Courvoisier which will be dilutive to EPS in the short-term. EPS accretion or dilution is, however, not a good guide for long-term value generation in M&A. We added on the weakness.

Another weak performer was Dassault Systèmes as its life sciences division Medidata underwhelmed. As was the case with Accenture, the share dropped strongly as results were released, following a 40% rally since the low point of October.

During the quarter we initiated a new position in Schneider Electric. Its leadership position within the electrification of buildings and infrastructure, built over many years, positions it well for sustained growth acceleration as customers turn to the company to help reduce their environmental footprint.

We added back to LVMH having reduced the position in 2023 and trimmed a basket of names on valuation grounds.

The portfolio has risen strongly since the end of October. While earnings continue to edge up, the portfolio's valuation multiple has also expanded in the context of an anticipated fall of interest rates. While company valuations are not at the highs of 2021, most are above their long-term average raising the risk of short-term volatility should they normalise.

Fundamentals, meanwhile, remain strong and we anticipate another year of double-digit earnings growth in 2024.
