Investment performance information

The Group’s assets are made up of UK build to rent (“BTR”) property. The principal factors affecting returns are therefore related to the UK BTR market in general and also to the particular circumstances of the individual properties and the tenants within those properties. The main factors affecting future returns are fluctuations in market prices, asset valuations, rental growth, the UK housing market, interest rates, inflation, and access to new land for future growth in the portfolio. A recession or rising interest rates and inflation could have an impact on the overall returns.

There is no widely published index that is directly correlated to the Group. The performance of the Company is compared to the FTSE All Share and the FTSE All Share Real Estate sector. The Company may achieve greater or lesser returns than the index due to investment decisions and the underlying performance of its assets; but also due to a lack of true correlation with the published index.

If we are not able to pay you what is owed, you could lose your entire investment.

what could affect my return positively?

Continued high demand for UK residential property (and UK residential rental properties in particular) that outstrips the supply of new homes should contribute to high occupancy levels and high rental growth. The low tenant concentration, geographical diversification and focus on ‘affordable’ rental accommodation (all key components of the Group’s model) produces low income volatility and strong consistent cash flows all of which should have a positive impact on the value of the Group’s underlying assets and its ability to generate/distribute profits.

Low inflation and effective cost management will also contribute to higher profitability, leading to higher income and overall shareholder returns. The Group’s portfolio comprises newly built homes and therefore the Group benefits from low capital expenditure and maintenance costs. Overall gross to net income deductions are lower than the sector average and should lead to improved returns for shareholders.

Other factors that negatively affect the UK housing sales market e.g. reduced mortgage availability, higher interest rates, persistently high inflation, the termination of help to buy, economic and employment uncertainty that lead to reduced demand for the sale of residential property can conversely lead to an increase in demand for rental accommodation as would be purchaser are not able or willing to commit to purchasing a new home.

what could affect my return negatively?

The portfolio is invested in UK BTR property. Small variations in rental income, gross to net income deductions and yield can have a material impact on the valuation of its property portfolio. This risk is mitigated through detailed site selection and appraisal, fixed price contracts, thorough tenant selection and management and geographic diversity.

Higher interest rates can lead to increased costs of funding that would negatively affect the Group's profitability. However, the Group has a prudent gearing policy (no more than 45% of gross asset value) and the majority of its borrowings are long term at fixed interest rates (2.9% on average) which mitigate the impact of any rises in interest rates.

Reduced availability of land at commercially attractive prices and/or an environment of cost inflation exceeding rental growth could adversely affect the Group's pursuit of further growth from acquiring new properties which could, in turn, affect overall levels of return for investor.

The disruption to global supply chains and inflationary consequences in the aftermath of COVID-19, Brexit and the continuing war in Ukraine has not had any noticeable effect on the Group other than delays to the completion of certain assets due to supply chain shortages. Inflationary pressures affecting raw material and labour costs can have a negative effect. However, the Company is in a good position to manage and mitigate cost increases through the use of fixed price design and build contracts and the robust appraisal process employed by its Investment Adviser ("IA").

If the Group was to terminate its relationship with its IA, it would cease to have access to the IA's expertise, its PRS platform and its close business relationships that have led to favourable terms and economies of scale that have taken years to establish. The Group would need to identify replacement sources of completed and development sites and any delay would likely impact the performance of the Group and overall returns for Investors.
