Seeking Alpha in a Smart Way

For decades, exchange-traded funds (ETFs) have served investors looking to replicate the returns of the market. Originally ETFs were based on traditional market indexes in which all of the stocks in a relevant market segment were included and generally weighted based on market capitalisation. Such traditional market indexes overweight larger companies simply because of their size and not their actual worth. The AlphaDEX® methodology, on the other hand, is designed to use fundamental valuation and momentum factors to select and weight stocks based on merit. The Index starts with the broad-based NASDAQ Eurozone Index, which contains approximately 685 securities¹, and then it is screened through the use of the AlphaDEX® methodology as shown in the chart to the right.

Similar to active management, the goal of the AlphaDEX® methodology is to identify stocks which exhibit the fundamental characteristics that enable them to provide the greatest potential for capital appreciation. As ETFs provide additional features such as exchange-traded liquidity, and transparency, we believe ETFs may be a better alternative when seeking alpha.

Standard Deviation is a measure of price variability (risk). The higher the Standard Deviation, the greater has been the price variability. Alpha is an indication of how much an investment outperforms or underperforms on a risk-adjusted basis relative to its benchmark. Beta is a measure of price variability relative to the market. Sharpe Ratio is a measure of excess reward per unit of volatility. Correlation is a measure of the similarity of performance. Upside and Downside Capture measure performance relative to an index during periods of market strength and weakness. An upside capture ratio over 100 indicates general outperformance versus the benchmark during periods of positive returns for the benchmark. Meanwhile, a downside capture ratio of less than 100 indicates that an investment has lost less than its benchmark in periods when the benchmark has been negative.

The NASDAQ Eurozone Index is a float adjusted market capitalization-weighted index designed to track the performance of securities assigned to the Eurozone.

The MSCI EMU Index is a free float-adjusted market capitalization-weighted index that is designed to measure the equity market performance of countries within the European Economic and Monetary Union (EMU).
