▲ Manager's Comment

Jan manufacturing purchasing managers index appears to confirm the view expressed in our recent commentaries that current economic recovery in China has almost run through its course. With declining demand for funds from business, business activities will be expected in the decline despite that corporate profits may still show improvement. People's Bank of China does not hide its hawkish tone. As a reminder to the market, it scales down Open Market Operations to squeeze out leveraged player in financial market.

Bond market is watching how China Fortune Land Development credit turmoil plays out. It is caught with the brawls between its 2nd stockholder Pingan Group and Hebei province. Until these two parties find a new balance of interest and liability, uncertainty could drag on for a while. It may be experiencing a liquidity crunch. Its balance sheet warrants higher bond prices than current market prices. The impasse between Pingan Group and Hebei provincial government requires a third party intervention to break. All eyes are on regulators and central government's move right now. Meanwhile, the whole corporate bond market seems falling into a frozen situation where only the most creditworthy names can find buyers at reasonable prices. If this situation remains post Spring Festival period, it may start to cause bigger trouble to many bond issuers that need to tap the market for bond rollover.
