Market review

The Covid-19 pandemic caused havoc in financial markets globally, and saw sentiment towards credit and equities fluctuate quite substantially worldwide. Asian equities and bonds performed similarly to those elsewhere, falling sharply in the first quarter of the year before staging an extraordinary recovery in the remainder of the year.

Early in the year, it became apparent that the spread of the virus would result in significant disruptions to economic activity. The subsequent introduction of lockdowns and social distancing restrictions clouded the outlook for corporate profitability, and saw a sharp sell-off in credit and equity markets globally.

On the equities side, technology (and e-commerce companies) and consumer discretionary sectors outperformed over the second half of the year, as rolling lockdowns and travel restrictions led to people staying at home. Real estate, which includes offices and shopping malls, performed poorly for the same reason.

The South Korean and Taiwanese equity markets were the strongest performers, due to their sizeable technology sectors. Conversely, Malaysia lagged the broader index, with feuding political parties dampening the prospect of an economic recovery. Hong Kong was also among the weaker markets, as the imposition of a national security law led to renewed political protests.

Deteriorating market conditions prompted central banks including the US Federal Reserve and the European Central Bank to recommence quantitative easing programs, similar to those used following the Global Financial Crisis. These arrangements were designed to flood financial systems with liquidity, and to help markets operate as normally as possible in the event of a further downturn in confidence and asset valuations. Part of the programs involved central banks buying corporate bonds on the open market in the US and Europe. These schemes did not affect Asian issues directly, but underpinned confidence in credit in all regions and helped the asset class recover losses from earlier in the year.

Separately, central banks slashed interest rates to encourage lending and, in turn, support economic activity levels. Government bond yields fell sharply against this background. Ten-year US Treasury yields more than halved during the year, for example, from nearly 2% to below 1%. Again, these initiatives proved supportive of corporate bonds. Higher yielding areas of the market proved particularly appealing to income-seeking investors. In fact, inflows into Asian credit picked up strongly after the Covid shock in the March quarter, and remained elevated for the remainder of the year.

Towards the end of the year, there were some encouraging developments on the vaccine front. Widespread immunisation against the virus should enable restrictions to be lifted in 2021, paving the way for a normalisation in economic activity levels. In turn, this should support corporate profitability and help minimise the risk of an increase of credit defaults. The brightening outlook acted as strong tailwind for both equities and credit markets into year end.

Outlook

Irrespective of how credit markets evolve in 2021, the Fund will remain reasonably well diversified. The portfolio was cautiously positioned at year end, which should help preserve capital in the event of an unexpected sell-off in credit markets in the months ahead. In general, the Fund continues to focus on higher quality credits. A strategy designed to benefit from a rebound in US government bond yields is also in place. The rollout of Covid-19 vaccines, massive fiscal stimulus packages and the anticipated economic recovery could exert upward pressure on Treasury yields. Finally, Asian currencies strengthened relative to the US dollar towards the end of 2020 and currency hedges were therefore implemented to cover the Fund's exposures to the Chinese yuan and Singaporean dollar. Again, these measures should help preserve capital in case of any reversal in the recent trend.

The outlook for Asian equities remains uncertain and the path to normalisation is far from secure. Given the current levels of market enthusiasm and elevated share prices, it may be sensible to lean against such unbridled optimism. Despite these issues, Asian corporate balance sheets are generally strong, and most portfolio companies are in a net cash position, which should help to cushion shorter-term cash flows if a reversal does occur. The Fund remains focused on high quality businesses with sensible management teams, strong franchises and long-term sustainable growth potential.
