

Latitude Horizon Fund

Investment Objective

The objective of the Latitude Horizon Fund is to deliver capital appreciation over the long term by holding a concentrated portfolio of stocks, whilst lowering the equity risk and enhancing returns through a selection of non-equity investments.

April Commentary

Investors' interest in interest rates hit new highs this month.

Combining two of the market's favourite obsessions was news that Bloomberg have released a new "AI" model to analyse 60,000 recent Fed headlines.

60,000 attempts to predict the direction of US monetary policy satisfies the definition of madness, especially with the recent poor track record of success. Perhaps the machines will do a better job of divination.

As it happens, rates rose again in April causing bonds and stocks to fall, with technology stocks leading the decline.

We expect this positive correlation to persist unless the economy enters recession, implying bonds no longer offer the strategic benefit to portfolio inclusion that they once did. We continue to own no conventional government bonds, and only a small holding in inflation-linked bonds.

As Edward Chancellor shows in his book The Price of Time, interest rates have (since around 1720) spent most of their time in a range of 3-5%. While the past is not necessarily a great guide to the future, it certainly offers helpful perspective.

Despite the headlines, stock markets are not really driven by interest rates.

According to Morgan Stanley, over rolling three-year periods, changes in multiples explain around 20% of stock market performance. Over ten years the effect is vanishingly small, being dwarfed by earnings growth and dividends paid.

Maintaining a focus on underlying growth, alongside attractive valuations and attractive dividend yields remains the optimal approach in our view. Chasing themes like AI, or trading stocks around interest rate announcements is a recipe to make brokers richer and yourself poorer.

We don't know where interest rates will go and, given the risk they remain high, we see greater value in owning short-dated cash compared to bonds, especially while the latter still offers lower yields. Inflation-linked bonds offer some protection to rising prices, although most of our protection here is within the companies whose shares we own.

As inflation continues to tick higher, and interest rates look to follow, our portfolio is positioned to benefit in a diversified way while offering downside protection.

Strategy's Previous Track Record - This is a composite of performance of long-only global absolute return portfolios principally the Latitude Horizon Fund, which launched on 1 November 2016. Prior to this, from 19 October 2012 to 31 October 2016, the portfolio was managed at Odey Asset Management LLP ("Odey"). The information above is for information purposes, only the Latitude Horizon Fund is being offered for investment. Performance above is net of fees and other charges. Past performance does not guarantee future results and the value of all investments and the income derived therefrom can decrease as well as increase. Investments that have an exposure to currencies other than the base currency of the strategy may be subject to exchange rate fluctuations. The data above reflects the reinvestment of all interest and dividends received. The Latitude Horizon Fund is a long only UCITS fund managed with similar investment guidelines, using the same investment process and subject to similar fees and charges. For full details always refer to the prospectus. While every effort will be made to manage the Latitude Horizon Fund in the same manner there is no guarantee that there will be similar performance. Note that at Odey the portfolio changed from a long only UCITS fund to a long-short UCITS fund on 23 April 2014. The performance in the chart above, from 23 April 2014 to 31 October 2016, is a carve-out of the actual long only portfolio at Odey, which includes both long only equity and non-equity positions, rebased to cancel out any effects from leverage. Further details on the carve-out are available upon request.
