MANAGER'S COMMENTARY

In May, the yield of China's onshore 10-year government bond went lower again to 3.07% from 3.16%, as there has been more evidence from recent economic data that the planned slower credit growth in China is cooling the economy from previous strong after-pandemic rebound.

In April, both economic and credit data in China showed that the strong after-pandemic momentum has continued to be gradually fading. As the favorable base effects subsided, the YoY growth rate of China's YTD Fixed Assets Investments dropped further to 19.9% in April from 25.6% in March, while the YoY growth rate of YTD Retail Sales dropped to 29.6% in April from 33.9% in March. The leading indicator, China's official Manufacturing PMI weakened marginally to 51.0 in May from 51.1 in April, and it has already peaked at 52.1 since last November. The YoY growth rate of China's Total Social Financing, an indicator of overall credit expansion, has slowed down further to 11.7% in April from 12.3% in March, and is expected to gradually slow down to pre-pandemic level of 11.5% by the end of 2021 by PBOC's guidance.

The manager kept the view of slower credit growth in China could potentially bring further rates rally opportunity, and continued to overweight duration against the index. By the end of May, the fund has been overweight duration at 6.3 years, compared to the index duration of 5.7 years.

In May, both CNH and CNY spots have strengthened against USD further, with another round of USD weakness against major currencies. For the month, the manager has kept the net RMB exposure of the fund close to 100%.
