Fund Manager's Report - 31 August 2020

PORTFOLIO OVERVIEW⁶

MANAGER'S COMMENTARY

China onshore yields edged higher in August due to tight interbank liquidity and still-weak sentiment on duration. Yield curves continued on their flattening journey since July, as the interbank borrowing costs, measured by the 7-day repo rate, climbed to the highest level (~2.5%) since end of June. Supply of special government bonds as well as local government bonds is expected to pick up in September, again weighing on market sentiment. However, on macro-front, China's economic rebound seemed to have softened. Credit expansion (measured by total social financing), industrial production and retail sales all fell below market expectation in August. While in the short term, bond yields may continue to get affected by technical factors such as seasonal liquidity jittering and bond supply, we think current yield levels look attractive, especially in the current global zero yield environment. Therefore, we remain constructive over China bonds in the medium term.
