Verbatim Growth Monthly Market Commentary - September 2023

Global equities declined 0.5% in sterling terms in September. There were some wider differences at a regional level. US returns, particularly in the technology sector, were impacted by fears that interest rates could stay higher for longer following a pause in rate hikes from the Federal Reserve. US Large Cap equities fell by 1.1% over the month, whilst US Large Cap technology stocks fell 2.2%.

Elsewhere, European equities declined 1.3% over the month, with continued interest rate increases and weak services and manufacturing data putting pressure on the region. In contrast, other developed regions, such as the UK and Japan delivered positive returns over the month. UK Large Cap equities rose 2.4% as the market responded positively to the Bank of England's decision to pause their interest rate increases, given that inflation looks to be on a downward trend. Japanese equities rose 1.6% over the month, backed by economic data which surprised on the upside.

Emerging markets also had a positive month, up 1.1%. India performed well and there was hope on the horizon for China after government stimulus measures were announced to address its lacklustre economic recovery. The highlight of the month was the commodity index, which was up 8.1%, supported by the rising oil price, with Brent Crude Oil up 10.2% over the month.

Finally, the bond market had another tough month as yields continued to rise and spreads began to widen, resulting in the global aggregate bond index declining 1.8% over the month.
